A one-day workshop with Simone Tippett of Union St Printmakers. Cyanotypes are photographic images that can be exposed both in a darkroom and outside in daylight. They are the original blueprints – in all their Prussian-blue gorgeousness – as invented by Sir John Herschel in 1842. In this workshop you will learn to sensitise paper, construct negatives from a variety of media and then expose and washout prints. Stencil media can include plants, objects, drawings, handcut stencils and rubylith. A fabulous way to play and experiment. The results can be used as artworks, gift tags, greetings cards, or as a first layer to be later worked up with other print/drawing processes. Includes a discussion of digital negatives, x-rays, wet cyanotypes and toning.

For a glimpse into the world's first photographic book, made with cyanotypes in 1843:
